

Acknowledgements

The editors would like to acknowledge a number of individuals and institutions whose help and support have been invaluable in the conception and completion of this volume. We would like to thank the two editors of Trends in Classics at De Gruyter, Professors Antonios Rengakos (Aristotle University of Thessaloniki/Member of the Academy of Athens) and Franco Montanari (University of Genova), for having believed in the significance of this volume and supported its preparation and publication wholeheartedly.

Andreas Serafim would like to thank the Research Centre for Greek and Latin Literature of the Academy of Athens for providing excellent research facilities that make the completion of this volume possible; and Millie Gall for reading and commenting on the Introduction and other chapters within the volume. The Department of Social and Political Science at the University of Cyprus is also to be thanked for generously covering the expenses of the conference “Sex and the Ancient City: Aspects of Sexual Intercourse in Greco-Roman Antiquity” (11–13 June 2019), which allowed the idea of this volume to germinate and grow.

Above all, the editors would like to thank the contributors: we have been fortunate to work alongside, share the knowledge and admire the professionalism of the contributors from the initial exchange of ideas to the preparation of the final full manuscript of the volume. We are sure that they will forgive us for having bombarded them with countless questions and requests which placed a huge demand on their time. The publication of the volume at hand reimburses us all for our labours.

Abbreviations throughout this volume follow those in L'Année philologique or the Oxford Classical Dictionary. A certain level of formatting standardisation has been imposed to ensure consistency across the volume, but individual stylistic distinctiveness has been respected. The volume is intended for the specialist scholars and graduate students of gender/sex studies both within the confines of Classics and beyond. All long quotations of Greek and Latin are accompanied by English translation.
